Special Session on
"Monetary Policy and Financial Development"

CALL FOR PAPERS

In the context of recent developments of the global economy, the main direction of research in monetary economics is concerned with the role of the financial markets. As the traditional instruments for monetary policy became limited, central banks from countries all over the world adopted new approaches in implementing monetary policy. In this context, it is mandatory not only to assess the impact of these measures, but also to see how they interact with standard monetary policy measures and if there are some potential side effects on financial stability. This Special Session provides an opportunity for the researchers interested in the fields of monetary policy and financial development to discuss their research and exchange ideas. Empirical and theoretical papers that are addressing the broad theme of the session are invited. In this session we welcome papers that address, but are not restricted, to the following topics:

- Monetary policy
- Implementation of conventional and unconventional policies
- Prices versus financial stability
- Financial markets
- The role of banks and credit
- Interest rates
- Inflation targeting

Keywords*: monetary policy, financial markets, interest rates, unconventional monetary policy
